North Gate, Mequinez. Mequinez is one of the three capitals of the Moorish empire, and has a population of 56,000. It is not widely visited by European tourists, who generally prefer to stay at the more tourist-ridden cities of Tangier and Mogador. Like all Moorish cities, it is in a state of decay. The peculiarly heedless temperament of the Moors has led to all their cities showing a decided appearance of wear and tear, which, however, only makes them the more interesting. This picture represents the arrival of a county Sheik and his caravan.
